UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT SEATTLE

10 HUNTERS CAPITAL, LLC et al,

11 Plaintiffs,

12 v.

13 CITY OF SEATTLE,

14 Defendant.

Case No. 20-cv-00983 TSZ

CITY OF SEATTLE'S REPLY IN SUPPORT
OF MOTION FOR A STAY OF DISCOVERY

NOTED ON MOTION CALENDAR:
Friday, September 25, 2020

15 I. REPLY

16 In opposing the City's motion, the plaintiffs seek to create an erroneous impression—
17 crafted from cherry-picked excerpts and inapposite cases—that the Court must deny the City's 18 motion to stay discovery. In fact, the Court's wide discretion to stay discovery, and the reasons
19 such stays are often implemented, are reflected in those cases and many others. The Court should 20 grant the City's request. It squarely meets the criteria consistently applied by courts in similar 21 situations, including (1) avoiding significant expenses the City will incur before the Court has 22 determined whether the plaintiffs' claims survive the pending motion to dismiss while (2) having 23 no material impact on the plaintiffs' opportunity to pursue the case if the motion to dismiss is 24 denied.

1 A. The Potential Availability of City Documents by Way of Washington's Public Records
2 Act Does Not Change the Analysis under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

3 The plaintiffs' primary argument against a stay is that they could obtain the same
4 information through requests pursuant to Washington State's Public Records Act (PRA), chapter
5 42.56 RCW, suggesting that their decision to engage in the discovery process instead was made in 6 the spirit of cooperation. See Dkt. 18, p. 4. But the potential PRA request has no bearing on the 7 merits or value of a stay pending a decision on the motion to dismiss.

8 First, the PRA concerns documents only. The plaintiffs have already issued twenty-two 9 interrogatories, which inquire into nearly every aspect of the City's response to the demonstrations
10 in the Cal Anderson Park area. See Dkt. 17-2. They have also demanded that the City collect 11 documents from (literally) hundreds of custodians from a wide variety of City departments (see, e.g., 12 Dkt. 17-1, Request No. 2¹), indicating that they may seek leave of court to take far more than 13 the ten depositions allowed by Rule 30. A stay would pause not only document production but 14 also the City's need to respond to those questions and to defend depositions.

15 Second, the burden of responding to document requests through the discovery process is 16 significantly greater than responding to PRA requests, in part because of the difference in response
17 times. The City's response to a PRA request must be "timely." RCW 42.56.100. But timeliness is 18 measured based on the City's own "reasonable estimate[s]," RCW 42.56.520. Strict compliance
19 even with these estimates is not required. See Andrews v. Washington State Patrol, 334 P.3d 94, 20 97 (Wash. Ct. App. 2014) ("The PRA contains no provision requiring an agency to strictly comply 21 with its estimated production dates."). The PRA permits the City additional time to respond as

23 1 Requiring production of "all documents and communication . . . to, from, in the possession of [etc.] which concern
24 [etc.] the CHOP [etc.]" the "Mayor," "members of the Mayor's staff," the "City Council" and "their staff," "all
25 members of the City's business liaison office," "the City's Office of Economic Development, including its members and staff," "the City Attorney's Office, including its members and staff," the "SPU Director" and "her staff," "SPU, including its leadership, staff, employees, agents, or contractors," the "SDOT Director" and "his staff," "SDOT, including its leadership, staff, employees, agents, or contractors," "Members of the City's policy staff," the "SPD
 Chief" and "her office or staff," "SPD, including its leadership, officers, staff, employees, agents, and contractors,"
 "SFD Chief" and "his office or staff," and "SFD, including its leadership, staff, employees, agents, and contractors."

needed “to locate and assemble the information requested,” and the number of extensions is not statutorily limited. RCW 42.56.520; see also Andrews, 334 P.3d at 98 (“[A]gencies [must] provide ‘the fullest assistance to inquirers and the most timely possible action on requests for information,’ [but the statute] does not envision a mechanically strict finding of a PRA violation whenever timelines are missed. Rather, the purpose of the PRA is for agencies to respond with reasonable thoroughness and diligence to public records requests.”). Depending on the breadth of a request, it may take a municipality many months or even years to complete its production. E.g. West v. Dep’t of Licensing, 331 P.3d 72, 76 (Wash. Ct. App. 2014) (over ten-month response time “timely”).

The civil discovery process provides much less flexibility and moves much more quickly. A stay of discovery would defer the significant investment of time and money required to respond until after the Court rules on the motion to dismiss. While similar requests can be made via public records requests, the applicable standards would not require the City to delay other City work to respond, and in any event, no response would be required before the motion to dismiss is decided.

In discovery, documents must be produced 30 days after the request “or another reasonable time specified in the response,” Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(b)(2)(B), and obviously before the discovery deadline. This limited timeframe can strain dedicated city resources, particularly where the requests are as broad and deep as those propounded here. See Dkt. 17-1, 17-2. In response to these constraints, the City must either displace other important government work, including its responses to PRA requests, or contract with others to accomplish it, often at great cost.

The Court should exercise its discretion to stay discovery until the court determines that the plaintiffs have stated a viable claim for relief. The plaintiffs may also choose to seek records via PRA requests, which will be handled in the normal course.

B. The City Has Justified Its Request to Stay Discovery.

The following principles relevant to the City’s motion to stay discovery are beyond dispute:

- While the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not provide for an automatic stay

1 based on a pending motion to dismiss, the Court has “wide discretion” to grant such a stay. See
 2 Little v. City of Seattle, 863 F.2d 681, 685 (9th Cir. 1988) (affirming stay of discovery during 3 pendency of motion based on the district court’s “wide discretion in controlling discovery”).

4 - A discovery stay is appropriate where the motion to dismiss (1) is dispositive of the 5 entire case and (2) can be decided without additional discovery. Bosh v. United States, No. C19-
 6 5616 BHS, 2019 WL 5684162, at *1 (W.D. Wash. Nov. 1, 2019); Roberts v. Khounphixay, No.
 7 2:18-cv-00746-MJP-BAT, 2018 WL 5013780, at *1-2 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 16, 2018). Courts make
 8 these determinations by taking a “preliminary peek” at the pending motion. Bosh, 2019 WL
 9 5684162, at *1; Roberts, 2018 WL 5013780, at *1.

10 - Staying discovery where those conditions exist “furthers the goal of efficiency for 11 the court and litigation.” Little, 863 F.2d at 685.

12 The plaintiffs recognize that the City cited an “impressive number of cases” applying these 13 principles. Dkt. 18, p. 6. Rather than acknowledging the Court’s discretion and then arguing it
 14 should not be exercised here, the plaintiffs attempted to marginalize these decisions by claiming 15 that they are exceptions to an imagined rule disfavoring such stays. There is no such rule: (1) even 16 as enunciated by the plaintiffs, the exceptions swallow the supposed rule;² (2) the cases plaintiffs 17 cite do not support their argument.

18 - In Intellicheck Mobilisa, Inc. v. Honeywell Int’l Inc., No. C16-0341JLR, 2017 WL
 19 4221091 (W.D. Wash. Sept. 21, 2017), no motion to dismiss was pending when a discovery stay
 20 was requested; the request was based on the party’s intention to file one in the future. Id. at *5.

21 - In Magassa v. Wolf, No. 2:19-CV-02036-RSM, 2020 WL 2307477 (W.D. Wash.
 22 May 8, 2020), the court granted the requested discovery stay, ruling:

23 given the early stage of this case, the nature of the arguments raised in Defendants’
 24 motions to dismiss, and the fact that both dispositive motions will be fully briefed

25 ² “[T]he cases demonstrate that the stays in those cases were predominantly granted either because the pending motion raised the particular issues of immunity, jurisdiction, or antitrust, or because the case involved some factor that simply does not exist in this case.” Dkt. 18, p. 6 (emphasis added) (citation omitted).

1 as of [the date of the ordered stay], the Court finds that a brief stay of discovery is 2 warranted and in the interests of judicial economy. If the motions to dismiss are 3 denied in whole or in part, discovery will proceed. [Id. at *1]

4 - In Old Republic Title, Ltd. v. Kelley, No. C10-0038JLR, 2010 WL 4053371 (W.D.
 5 Wash. Oct. 13, 2010), the court was provided two bases for granting a stay of discovery: a pending
 6 motion to dismiss and an upcoming election, in which one of the defendants was a candidate. Id.
 7 at *4. While the court summarily ruled that neither basis amounted to good cause for granting the 8 requested stay, the court nevertheless issued a short stay of discovery, which extended beyond the 9 date scheduled for a hearing on the pending motion to dismiss. Id.

10 - In Rosario v. Starbucks Corp., No. 2:16-cv-01951 RAJ, 2017 WL 4122569 (W.D.
 11 Wash. Sept. 18, 2017), the party seeking a discovery stay apparently provided no basis for the 12 request beyond the existence of its pending motion to dismiss. Id. at *1. Moreover, the stay
 13 requested would have denied the other party certain discovery, not just delayed it, and, for this 14 reason only, the court applied the significantly more onerous “heavy burden” standard. Id.

15 - Neither Magassa nor Williams v. Sampson, No. C17-0092-JCC, 2017 WL 1330502
 16 (W.D. Wash. Apr. 11, 2017), states that “issues of jurisdiction or immunity” are the exclusive 17 bases for granting a discovery stay based on a motion to dismiss. Both cases simply offer those as 18 examples of issues that may support staying discovery. Nor did the courts in Bosh, 2019 WL
 19 5684162, or Roberts, 2018 WL 5013780, suggest that their analyses meant that a stay should issue
 20 only when the pending motion involved jurisdiction or immunity.

21 The City has met the standard for issuance of a stay: (1) the City’s pending motion is 22 dispositive of the plaintiffs’ case as currently pled and (2) the motion can be decided without 23 additional discovery. The issue is not whether the complaint raises a factual dispute, as the 24 plaintiffs now claim (see Dkt. 18, p. 3, 6); the issue is whether the motion requires factual
 25 development before it can be rebutted. The City’s motion seeks dismissal because the facts as pled by the plaintiffs do not provide a legally sufficient basis for the plaintiffs’ claims. Applying the

1 law to the facts alleged does not transform a legal dispute into a factual one.³ The plaintiffs also
 2 failed to address the other factors weighing in favor of a stay: that the case involves a putative class
 3 action (which entails greater discovery-related costs) and is against a public entity with limited
 4 resources to perform its integral functions on behalf of its citizens. Dkt. 16, pp. 1, 5.

5 The plaintiffs claim that a stay will delay discovery by a substantial period, but then admit
 6 that it is they who will be the cause of additional delay. The plaintiffs state that they intend to 7 move to amend their complaint for the second time, expect that the City will move to dismiss their 8 second amended complaint, and anticipate that a stay extending during the pendency of these 9 motions could be significant. Dkt. 18, p. 2.⁴ These statements only underscore the propriety of a
 10 stay. Given the plaintiffs' apparently premature pleading decisions, and their intention to amend
 11 their complaint again, there is good cause for concern that discovery will be used as an improper
 12 fishing expedition to rescue the plaintiffs' fatally flawed complaint. See Intellicheck Mobilisa, 13 2017 WL 4221091, at *5 (“conducting discovery in hopes of finding a viable cause of action is 14 improper”).⁵ Moreover, if the plaintiffs’ projected timeline is accurate, unless a stay issues, the 15 City could expend massive resources in unnecessary discovery efforts related to claims later
 16 dismissed for legal insufficiency.

17 II. CONCLUSION

18 The City asks the Court to stay discovery pending further order of the Court.

 20 ³ See Jarvis v. Regan, 833 F.2d 149, 155 (9th Cir. 1987) (“Discovery is only appropriate where there are factual issues
 21 raised by a Rule 12(b) motion. . . . [T]he district court accepted the facts alleged by the appellants as true, but found 22 them deficient as a matter of law.” (citations omitted)); Rae v. Union Bank, 725 F.2d 478, 481 (1984) (“[D]iscovery is 23 appropriate where there are factual issues raised by the motion. . . . The district court took all the facts alleged in the 24 complaint as true and decided that the facts as alleged did not” state a claim.).

25 ⁴ In fact, the City will oppose as futile the motion to amend to add state law tort claims. See Bosteder v. City of 26 Renton, 117 P.3d 316, 330 (Wash. 2005) (requirement that tort claim be noticed before “commence[ment]” of the 27 “action” meant that plaintiff could not amend to add a claim after expiration of notice period).

 29 Minn. Feb. 5, 2009) (“Plaintiffs have failed to allege any viable causes of action. Accordingly, they are not entitled to 30 ‘conduct a fishing expedition for discovery, and only then amend [their] complaint in order finally to set forth well-
 31 pleaded allegations.’” (alteration in original)); Bergin v. Teamsters Local Union No. 77, No. 10-2289, 2011 WL 32 486230, at *1 (E.D. Penn. Feb. 4, 2011) (“Defendant correctly argues that such ‘fishing expeditions’ to seek out the 33 facts needed to bring a legally sufficient complaint are barred . . .”).
